ONLY A MAN AFTER ALL.

A LITTLE DISTURBANCE IN COURT HOUSE PARK—NO HARM DONE.

A young gentleman of the fifth ward thought he would have a little fun with the boys, so he borrowed his sister's dress, got a quantity of paper for a bustle, trimmed out a hat in the latest style and meandered up in the vicinity of the court house park.

It was only a few evenings since, those who were present at the time will distinctly remember the occasion.

The young man played his part to perfection. A number of the boys who were evidently "dying for some one to love them," caught a glance of the feminine countenance. It was enough. Like many a first glance it was to mould their destiny.

One young man in particular on whom fortune seemed to shine that instant more brilliantly than on the others, got into a conversation with this lady of charming manners and winning features. These large, expressive eyes were too much for him. He inwardly resolved that he must attempt to their overpowering influence.

"May I see you home," said the lad.

"Thank you, but I expect my mother to meet me down by the fountain," said she, "I'll meet you here to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock." With this they parted.

The young gentleman vowed he would be on hand at all hazards the following evening, and he was.

He, who was the charming young lady but the evening before, was also present, disguised to the former, who waited patiently in the identical spot until eleven o'clock, but in vain.

Now that the whole thing has been given away to this misguided youth he can't recognize many of his dearest friends when he meets them on the street face to face.

JAMES ROOK RETURNS.

He Escaped From the Jail Yard About Two Months Since

WAS CAPTURED LAST NIGHT

At the Farm of His Brother Ahaid Rook in the Vicinity of Happy Hollow.

James Rook, who was convicted of assaulting his daughter last spring, and sentenced to six months in the county jail, and who escaped about two months since, and was re-captured last evening by Sheriff Babcock and Marshal Hogan.

It appears that Mr. Rook was allowed to stay in the yard back of the jail a good deal of the time through the day for about four weeks before he escaped. He employed his time splitting kindling wood and making himself generally useful about the premises.

A cow belonging to Sheriff Babcock was also allowed to run in the yard and these two were alone the greater part of the day.

One evening just before dark some boys came into the yard for the purpose of getting to the river bank to some excellent fishing ground where they are in the habit of catching long strings of black bass.

The boys carelessly left the gate open and the cow and Rook naturally enough went out.

The authorities did not discover the absence of the cow until making time, when the gate was found wide open. A search was immediately instituted. The cow had a bell on which Rook had not taken off, consequently the trail of the cow could be more easily followed.

It was about three o'clock the following day before they succeeded in finding the cow. By this time all trail of Rook was lost. He left the city about nine o'clock, since which time he has been wandering through different parts of the country and stopping long enough in a place to be positively identified. He was known to have been at Sparta, Wis., at Sayannah, Illinois, and at several other places, but it was impossible to capture him.

The officers have said all the time that he would finally wander back, and as he was perfectly harmless in every way, no great anxiety was entertained concerning him.

Yesterday afternoon some people in the city saw some one on West Milwaukee street who looked very much like Rook. It was talked around among the boys and on leaving the city it was noticed that he went in the direction of Happy Hollow.

Sheriff Babcock and Marshal Hogan were accordingly informed of Rook's whereabouts and last evening went to the farm of Ahaid Rook about six miles distance from the city where they found Ahaid and his brother James burning brush.

James was at once taken into custody, brought back to the city and placed in jail.

Mr. Rook gave as a reason for running away that he was tired of the confinement and very restless.

He had served out only two of the six months allotted to him, and he will very likely be more closely confined for the remainder of his term. He offered no resistance to the officers, and went back to his quarters in a matter-of-fact sort of way that would astonish a professional criminal.

FACTS AND QUERIES.

MR. EDITOR:—It is not often that a man who has no desire to quarrel with legal decisions or verdicts in his own case, wishes to record for the public, facts, convictions and sentiments regarding a matter which is indefinitely settled; however, this I wish to do for the information of friends, all of whom I cannot answer personally by word or letter.

Those who know me will understand that I refer to the case of William Kelly, who was accidentally injured, losing a part of his foot, while following a mow, which I was using on the 5th of July, 1888.

Among so many conflicting stories I am sure one might easily feel at a loss to get at any connected narrative of the misfortune. I am quite sure no one felt or regretted the occurrence more keenly than I. The boy was just past 14 years of age at that time and had worked considerably for Mr. Ward, whose team I was then driving. He had been in the habit of trying sticks, bits of corn stalks or lumps of dirt at the horses to hurry them, and, following me as I started in the mow, seeing me try to urge the horse on, he tried to help me by running up and hitting the horse with the grass stalks in his hand. When hurt he said he thought I told him to throw a pebble at the horse. Probably he may have thought so, but I had not spoken to him and I think it very doubtful if he could have heard or understood me if I had, for I was using a Buckeye mowing machine, which all farmers know to be very noisy, and this one being loud, was much more so than the ordinary machines. It does not seem credible that I could have told him to throw a pebble when it is remembered that the land is clean prairie land, destitute of pebbles or stones of any sort. Undoubtedly the boy ran in with a helpful impulse only, understanding but little about machinery, and realizing no danger in the action, for he said afterwards, he thought the cutter was on the outside. It certainly took me so by surprise, that I was utterly unable to prevent the catastrophe.

To say that I felt a profound pity for the boy, for his pain and loss, is saying little.

While I could not see that I was blame worthy, (except that as it is unwise to allow boys to be around machinery, I still felt a desire to do what I could to repair an accident with which I had been so unfortunately linked.

Without any foreboding of the "terrors of the law," I tried to assist in the care of the boy, paying doctor's bills, etc., to the amount of over one hundred dollars. Later, when the father, under advice, began to hold me responsible for the accident, I offered to do all I felt justified in doing, rather than have my family and neighbors forced into the turmoil of a law suit, and have bad blood stirred up between me and my friends and neighbors. I offered to educate the boy or to give him five acres of land, or four hundred dollars and a cow. These being refused, there was no alternative but to be forced through the formalities of a lawsuit where one is sure to be brought into a state of mind where he would subscribe largely to the support of a home missionary who should tax the principles of integrity and the law of his country.

Not being consulted or given any opportunity to save the expense of legal proceedings, I am glad to say that the ordeal was less severe than I anticipated. I accept the inevitable and the abuse of such proceedings with what grace I can.

After all, the facts of accidental injury and my innocence of any responsibility in the matter are yet undisputed.

The greatest sorrow that I feel in connection with the matter is that through exposure in the exclusion of witnesses from the court, in the damp and trying weather had over my friends and neighbor, (just recovering from measles) met his death.

That Grant Wood, in his promising young manhood, should in this way be snatched from parents, wife, child and friends is terrible to me to contemplate, and when I think of it cannot see why this long chain of events, should have been allowed.

I have no chain of events, should have been allowed.
